(No, sire, I could count only

I was sure there were a lot missing!

December 1st, bivouac near Austerlitz:

Soldiers ! The Russian army is marching on you to avenge the Austriann, Our position is strong, and while they march to turn our right, they will expose their own flank.

Soldiers! I will command your battalions in person, and I shall not expose myself Jf» with your usual courage, you throw the enemy's ranks into disorder and confusion. But should victory be for one moment uncertain, you would see your Kmperor expose himself in the front rank, for there must be no question of victory on an occasion when the honour of the French infantry is at stake.

Before to-morrow night that army will l>e destroyed!

8.30 p. M.

The marshals will join the Kmjwror at his bivouac at seven thirty, HO that fresh instructions may Ixi given should the enemy have developitl tvny new movement* during the night,

0 P.M.

(The Kmperor) decided to go the round of the bivouacs on foot and incognito; he wan nearly at ont» recognised. It would be impossible to dewi-ilx* the enthusiasm of the soldiers when they HEW him, In an inntarit blazing torches of ntraw were rained on a thousand pole*, and BOjCKK) men were standing and acclaiming their Emperor, acme for the onniverxary of MM coronation, others saying that the army would preient the Kmperor with a bouquet on the following day. An old grenadier